Q: Limitations of Bigquery Select and APPROX The BigQuery Select api is great when it comes to accessing data, it's fast, flexible and scalable. What I can't wrap my head around is the limits of this query/API and how they will impact an application that makes heavy use of the API. Simple example: `SELECT * FROM `someTable` WHERE ip IN (SELECT ip FROM `someOtherTable`) AND (SELECT abs(network_latency_ms) FROM `someOtherTable`) > `someVariable` LIMIT 10` The performance of this query is good, but I don't understand the specifics behind the rows and columns that it returns. For example, the use of a subquery generates a temporary table which then gets used in the main query. Does the temporary table contain columns with auto-generated values with data about the row in the table? Or is it a completely separate structure? Or are the columns in the temporary table just like the columns on the table in the given alias? A: `SELECT * FROM `someTable` WHERE ip IN (SELECT ip FROM `someOtherTable`) AND (SELECT abs(network_latency_ms) FROM `someOtherTable`) > `someVariable` LIMIT 10` This query could be transformed as below `SELECT * FROM `someTable` WHERE ip IN (SELECT ip FROM `someOtherTable` WHERE network_latency_ms > `someVariable`) AND (SELECT abs(network_latency_ms) FROM `someOtherTable` WHERE ip IN (SELECT ip FROM `someTable`)) LIMIT 10` However, there are some limitations of the BigQuery Query API. Bigquery uses a GAE backend. The API is optimized for rather large datasets. This is an advantage if your data is somewhat static. However, if you intend to iterate over your data, you might want to consider using BigQuery's Streaming

Transportation sector, which has witnessed the largest decline in employment in nearly a decade, to top 300,000 by 2024, says ARA This article is more than 4 years old This article is more than 4 years old Transportation services, an industry already under stress due to the slump in oil prices, will see the second-largest decline in job numbers of any industry over the next two years, according to the Australian Resource & Analysis. The figures from employment experts ARA show the transportation sector will lose a total of 246,000 jobs in Australia over the next two years, the majority of which will be taken by those involved in trucking, motor transport and rail. The average driver's wage in 2016 is $76.45 an hour according to the Australian Bureau of Statistics. Global oil prices fall for the first time in 18 months Read more In a commentary, ARA economist Dr Richard Yetsenga said these job losses would push the unemployment rate to five percent by the end of the 2016. "In short, employment in the transportation sector is likely to fall overall by as much as 1.3% in 2016 and 0.7% in 2017," Yetsenga said. "It is by far the largest decline in employment in the four-year decline in the mining sector." Yetsenga said overall employment was expected to decline by 1.35% in 2016 and 0.8% in 2017. "This is due to the sharp decline in employment in the mining sector. Together, these job declines will push the unemployment rate to 5.2% by the end of 2016," he said. "The decline in employment will be very concentrated and workers in the transport sector will face the largest relative decline in employment of any sector of the economy in 2016." Yetsenga said the construction sector would also decline, but not as much as expected as the sector had not yet taken full effect of the mining downturn. "The decline in employment in construction is only around 0.5% but is still likely to be the largest in the economy," he said. On the expenditure side, economic activity would remain above the historical average but there would be notable declines in economic activity in the households and business sector. Yetsenga said he expected GDP growth to be at the
