Diversity Awards: Working with people of more than one race Education has been the carrier of many abstract ideas, ideals, concepts and the tools to enrich and cultivate our brains and minds. Although education is bound to help people learn the ways of the trade, essential tools like frameworks, support systems and systems all rely on people in the education, research and practice. The research of human nature and its quantified value is as essential as it is crucial to progress in knowledge and sharing of ideas to improve society and the world. All this is made possible by the collaboration of more than one race, culture or ethnicity. Apart from that there is this interactive process of being able to enrich and gain knowledge of the other people. In the last few years, diversity and the development of being able to work with people of various backgrounds is becoming more and more of a concern for us educators in academia and in practice. The main contributions of cross-cultural and cross-ethnic studies to research in higher education and the development of new skills and practices are focused on our multi-cultural working environment and include:

- Social cohesion. Enhancing identity and engaging all relevant stakeholders in the community. Building trust in relationships
- Policy development and implementation
- Recognising diversity

All these processes are bound to the ethnic and cultural differences in the society. In higher education, under the principles of inclusion and integration, not only the student body is increasingly multiracial, but also research, teaching and services based in the profession. Researchers to whom we can rely on being able to understand people of diverse backgrounds should be expected to reflect this diversity. In other words, research on these topics should be able to provide us with the support to work with people of other races and ethnic groups. This is to respond to the challenges in cross-cultural research. Since our research and educational institutions are based on and represent the inclusion of people from various backgrounds and cultures, we are not only looking for solutions to contribute to multicultural politics in the society, but we also have the potential to make a real contribution to the general discourse. Therefore, we need to distinguish the most important aspects of this research. We are more interested in what, when, who, how, 3e33713323
