The Guaiana Shield is a fertile landscape within the Brazilian Cerrado that is under the influence of the Amazon and represents a Pleistocene to present-day environmental change. Herein, we characterized the vegetation and anthropogenic pressures of the central Guaiana Shield by combining geomorphological, pedologic, archaeological, paleoenvironmental, and vegetation data. As the Guaiana Shield is considered the birthplace of the Brazilian ethnic groups, we estimated the spatiotemporal patterns of the influence of these groups in the landscape based on radiocarbon dating, a new map of the occupations of the Shield published by the Companhia Energética do ABC, and a socioeconomic parameter. The results of the spatiotemporal analysis were integrated by the summary of vegetation types in the Shield and for the mapping of the places of resettlement of the population. This integration revealed the diversity and complexity of the landscape's information and provided an alternative for resource management. The analysis has a general significance for the management of Brazilian landscapes and, at the same time, for research on the evolution of the landscape and human settlement. Acidic isoenzymes of serum transaminases (AST and ALT) in patients with breast carcinoma. The activities of acidic isoenzymes of serum transaminases (AST and ALT) in breast carcinoma patients were examined by means of electrophoresis. The obtained results indicate that the relative content of the acidic isoenzyme of these enzymes in cancer patients exceeds the control values. The level of activity of the low-molecular-weight form of these enzymes in carcinoma cases was higher than that of alkaline isoenzyme of each enzyme.
