A deeply religious man, Breese began a four year period of intense exploration, leading to his discovery of the site, which would come to be named the Cathedral of Christ and the Spirit. Breese had sought to become one of the sixty-six bishops in the church. This was an important time in the history of the Church of Scotland, a period when it was undergoing a radical move away from Calvinist doctrine and embracing new theological theories. The discovery of the Perth Cathedral was recognised as the start of a move into a new age within the church. Breese described the cathedral as a "house of God", where "the Spirit is enthroned in the temple of God..." as symbolised by the positioning of the cathedral's spires against the pillars of heaven. When the American architect, Richard Upjohn, was commissioned to design a new cathedral in Rochester, NY in 1853, he was inspired by Breese's discoveries at Perth. Upjohn's design is now regarded as the first Gothic Revival cathedral in the United States, and the style itself came to be used as the defining mark of a church building of that period. However, it wasn't until the early 1880s that the Perth Diocesan Synod acted on Breese's suggestion and designated the cathedral as the seat
