remove logo in video The KNecker cube - Wikipedia, the free encyclopedia The KNecker cube was a device that presented the user with conflicting visual information. According to philosopher William James, it was the invention of Pierre-Augustin Caron de Beaumarchais. ... the cube, which is named for the French physicist Jacques Bertillon, the inventor of the metric system. It is a paradoxical visual illusion that occurs when the angle of incidence of two different lines of sight is  $90^\circ$ , both lines converging at an image; there is a square of the angle's diagonal perceived in the center of the image; the closer the angle of convergence, the more square the image. That is, lines of sight that converge at  $0^\circ$  on the horizontal axis will converge at a  $90^\circ$  angle on the vertical axis, forming a square; lines of sight that converge at a  $45^\circ$  angle on the horizontal axis will converge at a  $90^\circ$  angle on the vertical axis, forming a square with the diagonal; and lines of sight that converge on a  $90^\circ$  angle on the diagonal axis (vertical axis) will converge at a  $45^\circ$  angle on the vertical axis,...
